Sr.

I cannot but looke upon the absence of our frend as a great misfortune, and especially in regard of his being at Amstirdam. I can think of no expedient but this, that you will be pleased to send my Letre by a messinger expressly to him. His Lodging is at Haute-beenes Inne, a place well knowne: and if you find it fitt to advise him to returne hither in case he did not speake with his Highnes before his departure. The charges shall be borne by me, and most thankefully repaid, but I must entreate you to dispatch the man that I may not appeare. I do most humbly desire the bode may depart this night and be required to bring backe an answer to your selfe. My letters fro France have such a concurrence of hopes upon this busines, that they tell me all will ruine againe, if that particular do succeed with, wch is now in agitaon here; And I am much assured it may, by the carefull & diligent assistance you have been pleased to afford vnto
