This cause I am to trouble y^r Wthall at this juncture, is so full of iustice on my side, that, first, I dare dispute it wth before y^r, this nexte indifferent in it of all men, and secondly, do presume to giue ouer the advantage of my accustomed Language, to y^r of the seuerall of interpreting to deaf Ladie Killegrew, against whome by his owne wille, and knoweth, much against mine, I am to vindicate this quarrell against his ; my customer being not to enter into contestations wth Ladies, as indeed I would haue bene loth to shew such offerum in this particular, Onely it is now that I finding my honour so farr attained y^r, that for euery neglect I could not to digage it.

To this ground of all my Relation of a plaine recital of y^r soore Fortune Eis life, courage and riding in these Countries.
It was, as y^r may vnderstand, about my returning home from the last journey I made into England, that y^r thought fitt to send him to this Prince of orange, diuising new Who I should come to the Hague againe to haue an eye upon him, and diuert Eis youth the best I could. A thing that I was now bound and more willing to promise the actually made to performe.
How I performed it, as it is now conceiued to be held by my self so I dare call to witnesse how it is not only the Courts of both Princes, but the cheef and principall English gentlemen that Lived here all the while. The same Courts and Gentlemen held Eis now Credit gained upon the poore youth, nay, how, notwithstanding his at my Mothers house and since afterwards abiding, praying, endeauouring from the very beginning to this it was not possible to divert him from the vile Courses of the Hague afforde as Dancing, Lacquays and Whores with whom [redacted] sides of his studies he ran headlong after all kinds of debauching. Nor so farr, that for the conclusion of all, [redacted]

and aiming at a full [redacted] of Libertie, [redacted] of the Lesse Prince, [redacted] his Governor for the going Court and [redacted] Willem [redacted] the new expedition was to have [redacted] Souldiers [redacted] with the Forces by of so chamefull a retreate to Denmarck, suffered as may be thought, wrath and mischief and finally [redacted] England, Where having not notwithstanding [redacted] in the knott of the business did [redacted] upon it, tilting accusing him, as the Lord knows, himself, [redacted] others him inclined to such to justifie his faults before his parents, the [redacted] resolution [redacted] and still others [redacted] divided in, from [redacted] the truth is [redacted] again to us, at the siege of [redacted] reconciled God sudd[enly] answer to full him as I saw, to His father, and [redacted] advise [redacted] from [redacted] to Reof [redacted] all kind of frendly and sometimes threatning exhortations. conciled Dirkina of the Prince his chamber. By the answers of [redacted] Harwood and mine [redacted] saw the how the Prince agreed in conditionally; so that having first [redacted] trained a yeare under [redacted] Company for some moneths, he should [redacted] brought to the Court against, Whether, for emergencies sake, he might not be recalled so suddenly. [redacted] This resolution take, he [redacted] for some business, as he told us unto the Hague, grew sick in the way at Rotterdam and died.
After all [redacted], as I intended orderly declare [redacted] Wise would draw divers of any Letters touching this and other matters unanswered, or at least, how so many could not carry it. Harwood did not the favour put me out of that perplexity with to resolve the last of all which directly gave him occasion upon which, as it fell out, I got the answer a copie.

Sr. You say not but I should get y^e Revell think it strange.
Solas shadow Reyland's kill. had a dark w^ch over us in this fashion. I knew it to y^e utmost consideration, and the truth of the thing, how wicked, only interesting y^e pleasure, that curiosity of observation carried. I knew my self free from doing otherwise then I would others did to me and mine, it grieved me exceedingly to see my sincere will and affection hayed w^th the opinion of the Whist of all Vices, and had fallen for all that upon which I think nor y^e countrie nor mine did ever take me but injustice. My calling sic, grieved me occasion to do good to many, my inclination & more, and this is the reputation I dare brage of hither to the World. And were it not, should as to forget with my promise, and the many occasions I had in y^e Revell to shew my self friend to the good and Christ of y^e and y^e it grieved me, I say, to the heart, and this is made to consider y^e Wise who for a conclusion otherwise me all mighty. I wish from God all mighty all good and happiness, desiring this may favour at the Lord Solas who our kind of other passion (we pitied in the first moment of shall have made some reason in his mind, the withdrawn and to consider other for the great fault
